A denotative reading of Rabbits.
The way the episode is filmed along with the laugh track added makes you assume that the series is a sitcom like series, that contrasts with the bleak and serious characters. You could assume that the girl sat down was the daughter of the woman stood up ironing, (dress codes) due to her younger style of dress and the mother doing the responsible duties. From that you would assume that the man in the suit is the father of the family (due to the old look of the house and the primitive iron you would assume that it's maybe set in the 50's or 60's) which means in that era the male of the house would be the one to work while the women stayed at home. The whole clip is a satire of the sitcom genre. The boring chatter and bland daily life actions of the characters contrasts with sitcoms in real life.